Santa Paula, Ventura County 911 Outage (Final)

On 12/05/17, the Frontier Santa Paula remote central office in Ventura County reported that 329 landlines had no dial tone due to power failure as a result of the Thomas Fire. Currently, these customers were unable to dial out to 911. Nonetheless, wireless service was not impacted. The Public Safety Answering Point (PSAP), Ventura County Sheriffs Office (VCSO), took call and were notified.

- As of 12/19/17:

- Per Frontier, the Topa Hut remote office has been temporarily restored through a microwave shot from the South Mountain, restoring dial tone for those customers with access lines and wiring in tact.
- Individual customers with damaged distribution lines are still out of landline service.
- Destroyed lines and poles in the area will need to be repaired before service can be re-established fully.

Service Interruptions:

Nothing significant to report.

WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Strong north winds (Sundowner) behind a low pressure system are expected to affect mountainous areas of Santa Barbara County this evening through tomorrow morning. Gusts to 50 mph with isolated gusts to 60 mph will be possible during this time.

Key Points

12/21 – 12/27

Thursday-Monday

- Dry conditions prevail.
- Offshore flow will establish itself Wednesday evening, beginning across Santa Barbara County, and then transitioning across the rest of southern California on Thursday, with elevated to high wildfire risk existing across these areas through Friday morning.
- Another surge in offshore flow will occur Sunday into Monday, again increasing the wildfire risk across much of southern California.
- Slight chance for snow in the Sierra on Monday.
- Below normal temperatures will settle across the rest of the state with Thur-Fri being the coldest. Vulnerable populations could be at risk.

Tuesday-Wednesday

- No significant weather impacts expected

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

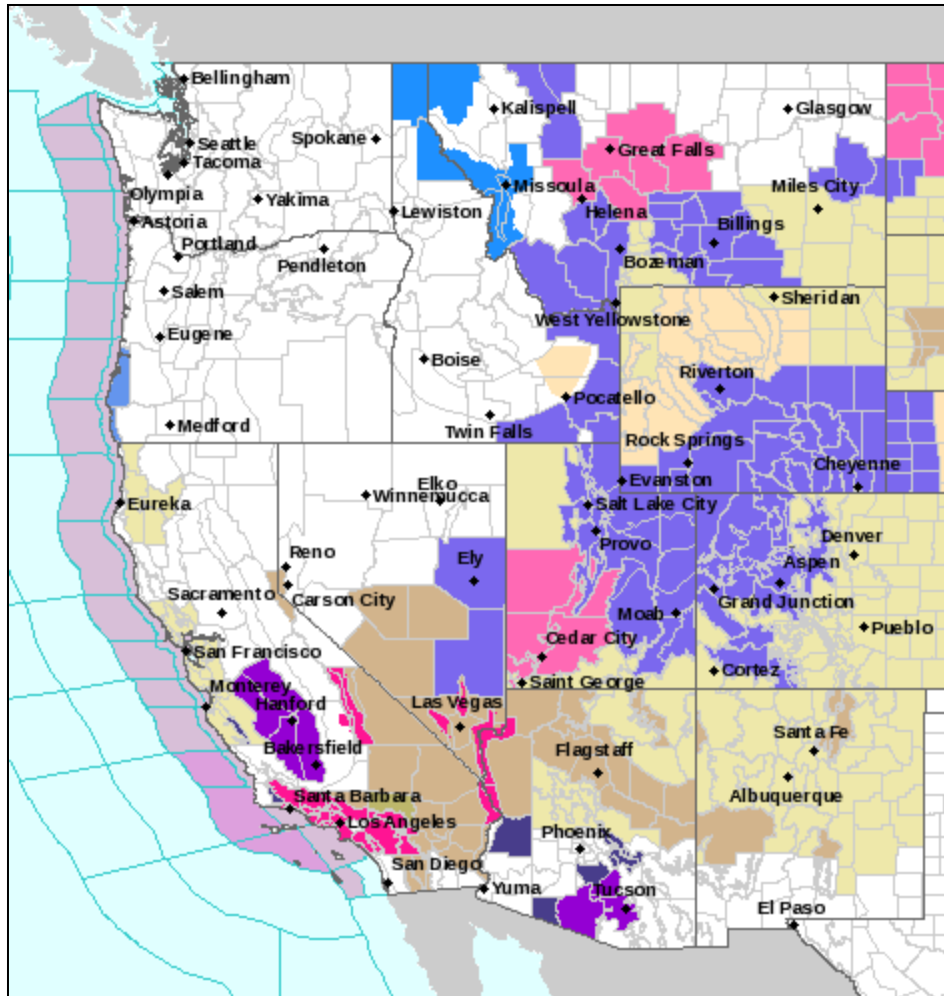

A vigorous cold front swept across the region overnight. Much of the precipitation associated with the frontal passage will have ended by noon today although a few residual showers will be found across the far north. Widespread below normal afternoon temperatures will occur and is the first time in at least 2 weeks that has occurred. A noticeable N to NW wind flow will affect the area today but the strongest winds will occur tonight with residual impacts into Thursday morning. Expect N to NE and E wind gusts between 20 to 30 mph with locally up to 40 mph favoring the west slopes of the Cascade and Sierra ranges. Humidity values will be much drier on Thursday compared to today although generally above 20%. The lowest humidity values will come Thursday night and impact the midslope areas although wind speeds will be light and that lighter wind flow will continue into Friday.

The weather models remain consistent with depicting a ridge over the area while also dragging a dry cold front underneath it during the weekend. Gusty N to NE and eventually E winds will affect the area favoring the Saturday night period. This appears to be a real shallow cold push so the strongest downslope winds would favor the west slopes of the Cascade and Sierra ranges with much less effect elsewhere. Thus, afternoon temperatures will warm to above normal status and combine with moderately low humidity. There is still a hint of the ridge getting nudged eastward just enough to allow some modest moisture to enter the region from the Pacific early next week. Confidence remains low at this time although some humidity increases and added cloud cover should occur.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A trough dropping into the Great Basin from the Pacific Northwest will bring westerly winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph to the mountain ridges and desert passes through this afternoon. Behind this trough, northerly winds of 20 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph will surface across areas prone to north winds over both Central and Southern California. Scattered showers currently falling across the far northern parts of Central California will spread south and reach Southern California by this evening. Most locations will receive less than a tenth of an inch of rainfall, but the Central Sierra will receive up to a quarter inch of rainfall. The snow level will be around 5,000 feet. Minimum humidity will increase as the day wears on today and then drop into the teens on Thursday. Maximum temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees below normal through Thursday, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. A ridge of high pressure will build into California from the Pacific Ocean bringing a significant warming trend along with minimum humidity in the single digits and teens Friday through Monday. Maximum temperatures will reach the low 80s over the warmer valley locations of Southern California Sunday and Monday. Light offshore flow will affect the area Friday through Monday. The ridge of high pressure will weaken causing temperatures to cool and humidity to increase Tuesday. The wind flow will become onshore Tuesday.
